

New Student Lunch

Today was the student lunch for Henderson's new students for the second semester of the school year. The turnout was perfect and what the leadership class was anticipating. On Monday, the leadership class discussed the new student lunch as a group and provided much feedback to Peter. When I attended the new student lunch in September of last year, I felt although there was too much talking and listening on the student's behalf and that I didn't have the opportunity to socialize as much as I would have liked to and get to meet new people.

As a leadership class, we collaborated on brainstorming talking points to keep the conversation flowing. Today myself, Justin, Libby and Morgan paired up. Justin and I took turns introducing ourselves, what we both like about Henderson and had each of the new students at our table introduce themselves and tell the group which school they came from. Overall, the lunch was a success and I can't wait to do it again.
